A depot of lubricants in the former concentration camp for Jews (dating from the German occupation).

A gasoline depot covering a forest area of ten hectares. A railroad siding has been constructed up to the depot. Only soldiers are employed.

Gasoline dumps in underground containers situated under a forest. Three to four trains, each composed of approximately fifty gasoline tank-cars, arrive daily at the depot. The capacity of the tank-cars is approximately 20,000 liters. This is the distributing depot for White Russia and for the troops occupying Poland.
